A Tendency To Imitate The Greek Types

Latest Fashion Notes From New York

(By Florence Fairbanks)

New York, April 2—Now, that Easter with its customary display of new finery is a thing of the past, the thoughts of fashionable women once more revert to evening toilets which, during the Lenten season were somewhat neglected. To a woman of original ideas and artistic taste the planning of an evening toilet must give exquisite pleasure this season, as fashion never before allowed much unrestrained liberty in the selection of style, material, color and ornamentation as at the present time. It might be said that everything is permissible so long as its general effect is artistic and picturesque.

The famous designers in Paris, London and New York are turning out a large variety of the most beautiful evening costumes and there is scarcely a period in the world's history which is not used some way as a model or suggestion. There seems to be a particular tendency to imitate Grecian types, the clinging lines of which are ever beautiful and especially becoming to women of good shape. These costumes permit the use of an almost endless variety of exquisite fabrics of so flexible a weave that they naturally fall into graceful folds. Many of these materials come in bordered patterns and many in robe form, either with bands of two widths for skirt and bodice or with a length of the border design in all-over of which to make the sleeves in case they are not cut in one with the shoulders.

Of course, a great many of the transparent and semi-transparent materials used for evening toilets have borderings in classic design, the better to accord with the Greek style of drapery. But in this respect fashion allows considerable latitude and, instead of adhering strictly to conventional patterns most fascinating borders are used, showing odd combinations of oblong and ovals in colored effects with naturally colored flowers and birds.

With some of these new borderings appear exceptionally long fringes of heavy silk matching or contrasting with the tone of the draperies, and a scheme of decoration which is especially good with a robe of bordered chiffon or marquisette is to use a heavy fringe of gold, silver or imitation pearl beads, as this treatment affords precisely the amount of weight necessary for drapings, which might otherwise float about in a frivolous manner, not at all in accordance with the ancient Greeks' ideals of what was dignified in feminine draperies.

For several months there have been vague, disquieting rumors afloat concerning a revival of the renaissance modes, and, while these rumors are not likely to materialize, there is far too much talk about 1830 stiff materials, full skirts and fichu-draped bodices to please those women who are so perfectly contented with the soft, clinging fabrics and the graceful draperies now in vogue that they would be quite willing to continue to wear them for an indefinite period. At present, however, the note of the 1830 style is noticeable only in some of the costumes into the making of which brocade entered to some extent.

Too much cannot be said of the beauty of these brocades. Not only are they of wondrous coloring, charming design and fascinating texture, but they are magnificent in general effect. Of course, the point of cost must be taken in consideration. Brocades of good quality are expensive, but they require very little trimming, in fact depend for their effect almost entirely upon the beauty and richness of texture, color and design.

The overskirt has, undoubtedly, arrived, but it differs radically from the tunic, which, in the minds of many people, has come to mean any sort of double skirt effect produced by trimming whereas the term "overskirt" implies the overdress which is separate from the skirt of the gown of matching or contrasting material. Lace is greatly in demand for overskirt purposes. Unless the lace is of irreproachable quality it would better be of any color save black or white, because in that case all its imperfections become painfully apparent, whereas, if the lace is dyed to match the heavier material, even the coarsest sort of mesh will pass muster and be effective.

The tunics designed for evening toilets at present are quite odd and original. Usually they are developed in chiffon, bordered or banded broadly with satin of a shade bearing no resemblance to that of the skirt over which they are worn. Sometimes a tunic in a very delicate tone of rose, blue or green chiffon will be used over a white satin slip broadly trimmed with heavy black lace or veiled with a transparency in a decidedly deeper tone than the tunic and embroidered with crystal or pearl beads or pailletted with silver or gold. Another charming fad of the hour is to wear a crepe meteor tunic of rather brilliant hue over a bullion cloth skirt veiled with black or white Chantilly. Both combination schemes are popular with matrons, while for young girls white transparencies veiling evening frocks of delicate hue are most in favor.

A casual inspection of the displays in the fashionable shops shows that the neckwear just now is strongly influenced by the fad for low and collarless effects. The profusion of Dutch collars and Chanticleer frills is bewildering. The collars are largely of the heavier sort, fashioned of linen and more or less handsomely hand-embroidered. Openwork designs are first favorites for the embroidery, but exquisitely fine embroidery of either kind appears upon the more sheer collars, though often in combination with the open-work.

The plaited full collars which some merchants advertise as Chanticleer frills come in all grades of fineness and in varying materials. One may buy a frill entirely of fine lace, of chiffon and lace, of linen and lace, of batiste and lace, or one may have a hand-embroidered frill with or without a dainty colored border. Plain narrow hems of color, scalloped and buttonholed edges of color, with or without a supplementary design of colored embroidery, narrow castelated borders of colored linen or batiste, these and dozens of others are to be seen among the colored border neck frills. The same designs are used too for side frills intended to adorn the lingerie blouse, and often these blouse frills are double or even triple, the under having a plain colored border, while the upper frill is bordered with minute scallops embroidered in the color or with a line of delicate colored embroidery and a Valenciennes edging.

There seems to be no end to the variety in such frills, and when fine they are charming blouse accessories; but it is with them as with all popular modes. They are copied in cheap, coarse materials and worn by every type of woman. However, the fine frill speaks for itself, and fortunately it need not mean great expense if one is willing to make it at home and bestow a little time and hand needle work upon it.

Stocks with frills and jabots attached are numerous, for not all women will subscribe to the collarless neck fad, and there is a surprising number of trig little tailored stocks in white and color and in all white, prettier things of this sort than have been shown for several seasons.

The renewed vogue of belt and girdle is one of the striking features of the new season's modes and the novelties in this line show a great variety of styles. Patent leather seems to be unusually popular, however.

Family Claims To Be Heirs
Of McFall Estate

At Mansfield As Deceased
Left No Will

Which Can Be Found By Those In Search

Wolfe Family May Get Bulk
Of The Estate

As McFall Is Said To Have

(Mansfield News)

Coroner Maglott and the police department have completely abandoned the murder theory in connection with the mysterious death of Hugh McFall, and despite the ideas along this line that are still expressed by a number of Mansfield people the authorities are firmly convinced that Mr. McFall's death was due entirely to natural causes, although the exact nature of the illness which is believed to have resulted in his going out on to the porch and there falling unconscious, has not yet been ascertained. It appears, according to Coroner Maglott, that some of the symptoms shown were not characteristic of ptomaine poisoning.

All efforts to locate a will have thus far been unavailing although search has been made in every nook and cranny of the McFall home for such an instrument, as well as in other places where it might have been left, among these being a box of papers which for a number of years past had been left by Mr. McFall in the vault of the Richland County Mutual Insurance company, of which Richmond Smith, a relative of Mr. McFall, is secretary.

This box was found to contain the deeds to the McFall property and other papers having to do with the estate, but there was no will. The fact that Hugh McFall's father and grandfather both died intestate leads many to the belief that Hugh also died without making a will and it is considered probable that the distribution of the property will have to be made by the courts in accordance with the laws governing such cases.

The earliest step in this direction will be the appointment of an administrator, which will probably be done within a few days by the probate court.

The death of Mr. McFall has had the effect of bringing forth a number of out of town people who are under the impression that they may justly lay claim to a share in the estate on the grounds of a more or less distant relationship to the deceased, and inquiries are being received from many cities along the line of probable relationships which may be established.

It appears that there is a family named Wolfe in Mt. Vernon, which is now looking up this matter, these parties seeming to be cousins of Mr. McFall as a result of their mother being a sister of his mother.

All articles of value, including the family silver, have been taken from the McFall home for safe keeping, pending the distribution of the property by the court. It is stated that the only money found in the house during the search was $2.80, which was gathered up in small change from pockets of a number of pieces of clothing. This was added to McFall's account, which he carried in the Citizens' National bank.

The hint that was dropped by a party in close touch with McFall to the effect that he had at one time mentioned a secret drawer in one of his desks, resulted in a careful search being made for such a drawer, in the chance that a will might be found there, but if there is such a concealed drawer in any of the desks it is so cleverly contrived that no trace of it could be found.

Coroner Maglott announced today that he will postpone the inquest in the McFall case until Monday in order to receive from Richard S. Barr a report on the analysis which the chemist is making of the contents of the man's stomach and which will not be completed in time to start the inquest this week.

It appears that the poison which is believed to have caused McFall's death was corrosive in its action but the coroner believes that it was not due to any poisonous drug that might have been administered but was of the ptomaine variety. Corlett Dye, the young bank messenger who found McFall, the physicians who were in attendance and others who were early on the scene will be subpoenaed as witnesses to testify at the inquest.

CAT

Was Roasted To Death In An Oven

(Coshocton Times.)

That a cat has nine lives was quickly disproved when the sight of their pet tabby roasted alive met the eyes of Mrs. Ross, a Roscoe woman Thursday afternoon, on opening her oven door. The cat is supposed to have been inclosed in the stove for the past week, having curled up in the oven for a nap, since the lady uses her oven only for baking bread and during the intervening times keeps the doors closed.

To add to the mishap, the man of the house in the excitement of the find, stepped backward upon one of the six orphan kittens and killed it.

LANDS AS PRIVATE CITIZEN

Populace, However, Is Kept Away From Landing Stage and All Possible Precautions Taken to Prevent Bomb Throwing While the Distinguished American Is Guest of City. Mayor Extends Welcome and Party Takes in Sight.

Naples, April 2.—Colonel Roosevelt and his party arrived here today on board the steamer Prinz Heinrich. Mr. Crowninshield, the United States consul here, received a wireless dispatch from Colonel Roosevelt asking him to notify the police that he wished to be allowed to land without hindrance and as a private citizen. The police accordingly prevented any unauthorized processions from boarding the Prinz Heinrich. A hundred policemen were detailed to keep the landing stage clear, and the public was refused permission to enter the landing stage.

The precautions that have been taken to guard against possible outbreaks are similar to those adopted to protect all distinguished personages. Members of the Camorra and other suspicious characters are closely watched. Their dwellings have been searched for possible bombs. When the Prinz Heinrich entered the bay, police were stationed at the various quays and police boats patrolled the port to prevent other craft from approaching the steamer. The special port quay was kept clear for landing Colonel Roosevelt's trophies, which will be trans-shipped here for New York.

No program had been announced, but the mayor and others welcomed Colonel Roosevelt in the morning, and the party went sight-seeing in automobiles in the afternoon.

INTERESTED IN OUSTER SUIT

Westfall and Schoedinger, stockholders in Road Recently Sold to Chesapeake & Ohio, Say Transfer Is Attempt to Evade Adverse Decisions in Ohio Courts—Also Charge Lake Shore Road With Unlawfully Holding Stock in Competing Line.

Columbus, O., April 1.—Two Columbus attorneys, Fred H. Schoedinger and Ralph E. Westfall, who hold stock in the Hocking Valley Railway company and have suits now pending to compel the company to show its books and reveal alleged illegal relations with other railways and coal companies, filed a petition with the attorney general urging that he bring suit in ouster against the Hocking and allied railroads and also against the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway company, for alleged violation of franchise rights. It is declared that the recent sale of the control of the Hocking by an alleged trunk line syndicate to the Chesapeake & Ohio and of allied roads to the Chesapeake & Ohio and the Lake Shore constitutes an effort to evade recent judgments in ouster granted by the circuit court against the Hocking pool of interests.

It is claimed that the sale simply transfers to the trunk line syndicate the direct ownership of the allied Hocking railroads, giving it the same control over these that it has had over the Hocking.

Against the Lake Shore, the allegation is made that it unlawfully owns the majority stock in a competing line, the New York, Chicago & St. Louis, although the lines are parallel, and that it also owns a majority of the stock of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway company and of the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie. These roads are declared to be competitors of the Toledo & Ohio Central, the Zanesville & Western and the Kanawha & Michigan, the latter three constituting the group allied with the Hocking.
